ARTS BUILDING STOPS DANCE $500 GO TO LEWISOHN'S

Junior Art Patrons and Friends Evicted From Galleries by Charter Rule Forbidding Such Frivolities—Notable Opening Exhibition.

The Junior Art Patrons of America, who opened their first exhibition in the Fine Arts Building at 215 West Fifty-seventh street yesterday afternoon, returned to the Fine Arts Building last night with 500 of their friends for a ball to be confronted with the disconcerting information that they could not dance in that temple of art.

Merriment turned to amusement and amusement to gloom with the unexpected rule that was to be enforced. The rules were to be driven by some inflexible rule from the pleasant interior into the rainy streets, when Mr. Adolph Lewisohn, one of the patrons of the exhibit and the restorer of the extraordinary situation to normal by asking everybody to go with him to his house at 881 Fifth avenue, take their music along and have their dance.

It was 11 o'clock when Mr. William A. Faxon, president and treasurer of the Fine Arts Building, informed Mr. Albert Stern, another Junior Art patron, who in turn informed Mrs. Stern, organizer of the Junior Art Patrons of America, that the charter of the Fine Arts Building prohibited anything like dancing within its precincts.

The "blue law" of the Fine Arts Building was discovered at the last minute by President Faxon. The committee had the elaborate plans for the inaugural ball, and Mrs. Stern had received the members of the new art league and the artists represented in the exhibit, seated by Mrs. Henry C. Coburn, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mr. Alfred C. Bosson, Mrs. R. Horace Harding, Mrs. Egerton L. Winthrop, Mrs. Benson B. Sloan, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, John Martin, Charles Demuth, Arthur B. Davies, Louis Bouché, Man Ray, Preston Dickinson, Marden Hartley, Edward Hopper, and others.

Among the artists of avowed revolutionary tendencies whose pictures now invade the sacred precincts of the Academy of Art, the Fine Arts Building, John Martin, Charles Demuth, Arthur B. Davies, Louis Bouché, Man Ray, Preston Dickinson, Marden Hartley, Edward Hopper, and others.

Mr. Lewisohn offered his home for the dance. Five minutes later he staggered his butler with the order to prepare supper for 500, who would arrive within an hour. The butler was a resourceful person and by the time the limousines and taxi cabs had begun to arrive the basis for the supper had been laid.

Confusion that followed the edict issued by President Faxon was thus turned into one of the most unusual parties in the records of local society. The guests were Mrs. Stern, Mrs. Egerton L. Winthrop, Mrs. Benson B. Sloan, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, John Martin, Charles Demuth, Arthur B. Davies, Louis Bouché, Man Ray, Preston Dickinson, Marden Hartley, Edward Hopper, and others.

In the party were the Misses Olivia Stern, Marjorie Hughes, Julia Finck, Ethel T. Towner, Mrs. Mary Channing and Le Caron Victor, who dressed as pierrot and pierrette, had sold programs in the Fine Arts Building before the party was evicted. The others of the party were Mrs. Stern, Mrs. Egerton L. Winthrop, Mrs. Benson B. Sloan, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, John Martin, Charles Demuth, Arthur B. Davies, Louis Bouché, Man Ray, Preston Dickinson, Marden Hartley, Edward Hopper, and others.
